Chapter 2 by R

He arrived there at 5:00. On the dot.

He had never been that punctual in his life.

The park was still dark, due to the shade of trees, and it was practically empty so early in the morning. He had passed a few joggers, but no one else.

Rose walked out from behind a tree, grinning.

"I'm glad to see you James." She said. "I'm so glad you could make it."

She offered her outstretched hand to him, and he smelled it. Maybe it was stupid, but when he smelled her hand he almost fell more in love with her. Then he kissed her with a small bow, like some ancient gentleman.

She grinned widely. "Perfect!"
